torney; and his superior officers. In this he was forcibly taken from his boarding house at night, carried a quarter of a mile into the prairie, and beaten unmercifully with the lash and even butts of their whips across the spine and ribs, breaking one of the ribs and endangering his life by the blows across the spine, and threatening him to leave the State in five days or suffer the death penalty at the

At the General whipping of the opposers of the Vigilance Committees in the parish of Lafayette, it was reported, that one of the party, to avoid being whipped, blew his own brains out. Since that event, it has been discovered that the death wound was not self-inflicted, but that he was shot by an enemy. Three others have died from the effects of the whipping they received, and one other was at the point of death at Opelousas a few days ago. Among those who have died was a young man by the name of Singleton; a clerk in a store at Bienville Bridge. He was known to be an estimable young man and had nothing to do with opposing the vigilantes, he being a looker-on at their proceedings.

THE STEAM PLOW.—The Cincinnati Press says that thousands witnessed the successful working of the Steam plow "Lancaster," invented and patented by Joseph W. Fawkes, of Pennsylvania, at the national Fair at Chicago. Three thousand dollars—the first prize at the Fair—has been awarded him, on the recommendation of an examining committee.

trial was intended only for large operations, being capable of breaking from twenty-five to forty acres per day. Its actual performance was, in four minutes, to plow a strip of two hundred and forty yards long and twenty feet wide, and the headlands of fifty feet were crossed, one in twenty-seven seconds and the other in thirty seconds—the eight plows being elevated and lowered in

The Committee, it is said, have confidence that a machine of one-fourth the cost and capacity will still successfully complete with animal power.—The "Lancaster" is on its way to be exhibited at the American Institute in New York. Rewards and blessings, await the man who is to relieve the farmer and his horses of the drudgery of Newly Discovered Gold Mines in Georgia.—Col. N. J. Scott, of Auburn, Alabama, on his return from New York, favored our sanctum with a visit a day or two since, and left with us a circular, from which we gather the following facts: Messrs. M'hone & King have purchased the "Glade"

"Mines" near Altoona, in Cass county, Ga. The value of these mines is incalculable. Col. Scott informed us that he was offered, while at the North, three hundred thousand dollars, for three-eighths interest in these mines, by responsible parties and refused it. Professor John Darby, a man of long experience and practical knowledge in natural science, has examined these mines personally, and gives his testimony in favor of their vast richness.—

THE CALIFORNIA GOLD CROP.—According to the California Register, for 1859, there were in operation in 1859, in fifteen counties from which information has been obtained, 333 quartz-crushing mills, the machinery of which cost about $2,267,000.

The richest quartz vein in the State is that of Allison's Rancho, which is believed to be the richest gold mines in the world. The first sixty-three tons of quartz from this vein produced $22,000. The vein or lode, called lead by the miners, was opened in October, 1855. The yield during the ensuing two years was estimated at $1,500,000. Rio del Norte.

Eight thousand tons of the rock have been crushed, which has yielded $200 per ton. Street and Soulsby's claim, in Thomas county, is supposed to contain gold rock worth $4,000,000.—Colonel Fremont's Mariposa Rancho Mines are yielding him, it is estimated, $50,000 per week. The authorities reported by the Register state the production to have been very uniform since 1851 at about $70,000 annually.

The Supreme Court of Alabama has recently decided that the law by which it was provided that no liquor should be sold within five miles of the town of Greencboro, where the Southern University is located, is constitutional.— This settles the question. The liquor shops have all been closed, and the knobs hung in crane. The decision free the town of a great nuisance for five miles, taking them into the open prairie, or into the midst of plantations, whose owners do not wish any draughts to corrupt their negroes.

tion of a portion of the Westbury and Hensbury estates of the late Hon. W. M. Noel. Those estates are within three miles of the port of Bristol, in the west of England, and the prices realized are said to have been the highest known for many years. With the exception of three lots, the land offered was all sold. The Westbury land, twenty-two and a half acres, brought five hundred and thirty dollars.

The Hembury land, forty acres, four hundred and fifteen dollars an acre; and some lands near Thornbury, three hundred dollars an acre.

The ancient Romans had a law, ne quis fructum suum in publicum convicium, that no man should make a public feast, except that he had lent food to the poor in his neighborhood.

A boy was asked what meekness was. He thought a moment and said: "Meekness gives smooth answers to rough questions."

A husband can readily test the utility of a wife who is not ashamed to be seen putting her stockings on.

1. The first step in the process is to identify the problem or issue that needs to be addressed. This involves gathering information and understanding the context of the problem.

2. Once the problem is identified, the next step is to define the objectives and goals of the project. This helps to clarify what needs to be achieved and provides a clear direction for the team.

3. The third step is to develop a plan or strategy to address the problem. This involves breaking down the problem into smaller, manageable tasks and determining the resources needed to complete each task.

4. The fourth step is to implement the plan. This involves putting the strategy into action and monitoring progress to ensure that the project is on track.

5. The final step is to evaluate the results of the project. This involves assessing the outcomes against the objectives and goals and identifying any areas for improvement.

POETRY.

A PRAYER FOR A DYING CHILD.
By MISSIE BARY LEE.

Since I cannot save thee, darling, Since my yearning prayer is vain
While my heart so bleeding broken,
And my eyes so dim and pain,
Bonds my soul before the altar
Of the Father's golden throne, Praying, O, with tones that falter,
For some soul to guide thee down.

Through the dark and shadowy valley,
O'er the river chill and wild,
Up the steep steps of soul-land,
Thou so young, and mild, and tender,
Full of tears when Mamma's gone,
How couldst bear the radiant splendor
That at last should o'er thee dawn?

Send some spirit, Father, hark,
Down to guide my fainting dove,
There is one among these angels,
Who was once my child of love,
Like his eyes so blue and vondrous,
And his hair like his and golden,
Falls around her pallid face.

Shall not he, with gentle coming,
Fold his wings beside her head,
Clasp her soul to his so softly,
Ere we call our blessing dead?
Ah methinks I feel the presence—Oh give pardon for my sorrow
That my darling is with God.

THE EARLY DEAD.
By MISS LEXOX CYNTHIA.

We buried her while morn'g's light
Was staining o'er the sky, Ere yet the tears of dewy night
On Nature's face were dry.

We buried her while still the sun
Was on the horizon's verge,
The lark before our task was done
Began to sing her dirge.

We laid our sleeping flower among The first awaking flowers, Like them she was so sweet and young
That blighted bud of ours.

She died at dawn—we laid her where The sun's first smiles will rise,
He will not look on aught so fair
Before he gains the prize.

We did not leave a trace of gloom
About her grave-laid tomb,
All should be bright beside a tomb
Which holds the early dead.

How lying had she dwelt on earth
Before she passed away,
Death is the patient's better birth,
The dawn of perfect day.

Miscellaneous.

The Story of Richard Miller, OR, INVENTION OF THE BRICK MA-CHINE.

SOME years ago, in a little city in the West, lived Richard Miller, an honest, industrious, sober, shrewd man. He had emigrated from Philadelphia a few years previous to the opening of my story, with his wife and child, and by economy and the closest attention to business, he managed to lay up six hundred dollars. This sum he would have himself and family beyond the reach of want in a few years, had it not been for that insidious monster consumption.

The fell destroyer came to him, as usual in such cases, in a bad cold, and in a long time he flattered himself into the belief that it was only a bad cold, but like a skilful spider and miner, it soon undermined his constitution, and he began to have some faint glimmering of his real condition.

There was no one staying any longer in the West, so he sold his stock and furniture, and returned to Philadelphia, where he took up his permanent abode, having become entirely too weak to work, and spent his days in that inactive, but petulant state so common to consump-tives.

One day he took it into his head to consult an eminent physician—one of the Professors of a medical college—in order to ascertain his true condition. He called upon him, stated his case, and underwent the customary examination.

"Young man," said the professor, "your lungs are badly affected, and I am only dealing frankly with you when I say that in my opinion you are not long for this world."

Miller's heart sank within him as he heard his doctor's words. He had no implicit confidence in the professor, and as he thought of his wife and child, he felt very much as if for the future the world would be blank to him.

"Did you ever drink whiskey?" inquired the Professor, as he paced the room.

"Never, except upon one, or perhaps two occasions," said Miller.

"You can," said Miller, "I have probably drunk three or four times in my life, but I never drank more than a glass, and I never felt any harm from it. It is a dangerous excitation, but in giving it to you I have reason to believe that you will not be able to obtain the mastery over you. Get a pint of it a day."

Poor Miller, ready to grasp at the merest shadow of relief, went to a neighborly store and purchased a demijohn of Bourbon whiskey, and commenced to drink of it at intervals through the day.

A year rolled away, and Miller was much improved. His cough was easier, and the stimulus appeared to impart a kind of artificial strength to his body; but I regret to say, his appetite, which never before craved alcoholic drinks, had assumed an abnormal condition, to appear, which it now required not less than a quart per diem.

This image shows a narrow vertical strip of a manuscript page. The text is written in a dense, cursive script, characteristic of early modern European handwriting. The strip is narrow, showing only a portion of the original page's width. At the top, some text is visible, including what appears to be a heading or a section marker. The main body of the strip contains several lines of text, which are mostly illegible due to the narrowness and the quality of the reproduction. The bottom of the strip shows the continuation of the text, with some words like "et" and "quod" visible. The overall appearance is that of a fragment from a larger, more complete manuscript page.
